

How Does A Listening House Work?

The community crafts a question.

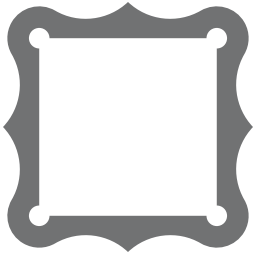

The artist and community identify a space. The artist and community work together to clean up the under-utilized space.

Artist holds hours in space and is present to converse with community members about the important question.

Postcards are distributed to the community, inviting responses to the question.

Artist displays community responses in the listening space and online.

Artist holds public exhibition hours, and a community event to inspire further contributions.

Shared values and opportunities for community engagement are identified.

Responses are catalogued and presented to community leadership and partnering organizations.

Transformation sprouts organically from community members, using community-generated solutions with existing resources to begin sustainable change.
